Explanation :		* Slip-through time in diaper testing is a key indicator of absorption performance, reflecting how quickly a diaper absorbs liquid. A shorter time means faster urine absorption into the inner layer, reducing surface wetness, improving comfort, and lowering skin irritation risk.  Re-wet testing measures how much liquid from a diaper’s inner absorbent layer reappears on the surface touching the skin after absorption. It reflects the diaper’s ability to lock in moisture, preventing rewetting and reducing skin irritation risk.  Diffusion length in diaper testing refers to the maximum distance that liquid (such as urine) spreads across the surface of the diaper before being fully absorbed. This metric evaluates how evenly and effectively the diaper distributes liquid to its absorption core. A shorter diffusion length may indicate uneven absorption, potentially leading to leakage or prolonged skin contact with moisture, while a longer, more controlled diffusion length suggests better liquid dispersion and absorption efficiency, enhancing dryness and comfort for the baby
